Missing Link - The missing person project

Lines Fiction: ...and in 'Missing Link' you enter the homes of missing persons to make drawings?

Daniela Ehemann: Yes for my project 'Missing Link' I entered the homes of missing persons to make drawings, I got the permission to do so by the police. Unbelievable that there are around 1400 persons missing every year, just in Berlin alone.

In this work I focused on the search of a personal identity, expected to be mirrored directly or indirectly through the belongings of the missing tenant. I started with the analysis of what I came across, like an open drawer or a used cup on the kitchen table, to find out who they were and why they left. Finally I had to deal with the insight that the imagination of identity always is lined by truth and error, as well as reality and fiction.

In this project I transferred the outlines of my drawings into sculptural objects for an installation.
